FEDERAL CAREER GUIDE

Are you interested in pursuing a job in a social science field? The federal government offers a variety of opportunities for individuals with knowledge and skills in community planning, economics, psychology, social work and more. For example, psychologists help assess and rehabilitate the mental health illnesses of veterans at the Department of Veterans Affairs. Sports specialists create and manage physical activity for the armed forces in the Department of the Army and archivists manage and preserve historical documents at the National Archives and Records Administration.

This guide will give you a glimpse of the type of physical science jobs available in the government. For more information about searching and applying for positions in the federal government, visit gogovernment.org
